

darya atighi

11:34 AM (7
minutes ago)

to me

Does technology play a role in making people feel more isolated?

Nowadays, we are living in an advanced world and every day we wake up we are facing with a new things that is happening around us. Most of our lives today depends on technology and it is make-making our lives easier than the past but some of the people believe that technology is making us isolated. I agree with this opinion to some extent but I would like to talk about the advantages too.

One of the advantages that technology brings to us is that we can communicate with other people around the world with a text or a phone call and if we want to tell someone a-some news there is no need to write them a letter we can just text them .

The second benefit is that we have accesses to the world news we can be aware of what is happening in the world just by doing a google search/googling x /searching in-on the google. The other benefit that technology brings to us is that if we want to buy something we do not have to go to the store we can just order it online. The other merit is that if we need a taxi and we cannot find the one in the street because it is too late or too early we can use some application which is-allow-s to us to grab a taxi.

However, there is-are some drawbacks to o technology one of which is it makes most of our meetings s online despite the fact that humans need -a face to face communication. Over time, this issue brings us -a lots of mental illnesses like depression and isolation/make-making people isolated. We need to make people aware of people from these drawbacks because if we want to have a good society we need to people to work together and be in touch with each other.

In conclusion, we should streak-strike a balance between technology and face to face communication because today technology is the /an inseparable part of our lives.