Some people think that it is important that students get acquainted with History and others argue that learning about Science and Technology is more essential. From my point of view, it is important/vital/crucial that pupils experience different fields and detect their interests.

Many argue that everybody should know their past and the events that occurred to their ancestors. They believe that there are numerous lessons in history that should be learnt and used d-them in daily life. Besides, they claim that historical events would be always repeated in the future and discovering history is equal to gaining experience in life. Moreover, they say what constitutes our society is foundfinding in the past. In other words, our culture and identity are related to our history. As a result, the importance of the History subject is undeniable and schools are the place where students should be well taught about History.

On the other hand, nowadays, with rapid technological improvement, some individuals say that Science and Technology has become the main daily subject. It seems to prepare the students who can compete in the new lifestyle, keeping them updated about the scientific discoveries is undoubtedly vital. They discuss that the pace of progress of science and technology has increased dramatically and the future will be completely different. As a result, it is crucial that students are-be taught perfectly-accordingly/effectively to be able to have a successful life and adequate job in the future.

To sum up, despite the rapid growing in science and technology and the necessity of educating the students to prepare them for highly competitive life in future, the value of history and the importance of becoming familiar with it are not deniable. Hence, in my opinion, both subjects are as essential as the otheranother and should be taught perfectlyeffectively.
