

First impressions are important. Some people think that doing well in an interview is the key to securing a good job. To what extent do you agree?

A group of people believes that first expressions ~~are~~ really matter. thus, in order to ensure a good job having a great interview can be a turning point. I do agree with the concept, However, it seems to me, ~~well-proper~~ education background and having a strong resume ~~is-are~~ as important as first impressions.

The purpose of having an interview is to measure a candidate's communication skills and confidence. Also, when a company or institute manages an interview for people who are willing to get job positions before ~~hire-hiring~~ them is that they want to be familiar with candidates' vision and mindset to be sure they choose a person who is a match with the company's ~~policy-policies~~ and he is the right person for the job. I think confidence, passion and more importantly, flexibility are the elements that can be recognized in the first impression which are vital for any job and employers as well. A person who has these items will have more chance to be hired.

On the other hand, having a higher education and an advanced ~~d/strong/impressive~~ resume is essential as well because most companies before arranging any interview ask for individuals' resume and their education background in ~~the~~ first place in order to check their qualification. Employers will make their decision based on candidates' experiences first ~~and~~ then they ~~are~~ going to call them for a face-to-face interview to check ~~scrutinize/examine~~ their character and other skills. However, there is always a chance that a chosen person in the first part loses the chance in an interview.

As a result, merely with a good impression you can ~~not-not guaranty-guarantee~~ a ~~decent/well-paid/good~~ job, ~~soalso~~, a perfect resume will not ~~necessarily~~ secure a good job as well.
