

Sometimes people are assigned to work in a group on a project. Do you agree or disagree with the following statement. The group will be helped more by a person who is willing to do what other group members want than by a person who often strongly insists that things should be done in a way that is different from what the group wants to do. Use reasons and examples to support your position.

Hardly ever can anyone call into questions the significant role of working in group in people's life. The question arose as to whether the group's members should ponder others' opinion or treat strictly to other ones to follow their own way. Personally, I think it would be beneficial for a group, if decisions are made by a whole group for some reasons which are illustrated at ~~the~~ length in the subsequent paragraphs.

The first and most obvious is, two heads are better than ones which means we can consider challenges by another perspective besides ours which sounds more profitable. In other words, a person who insists to obey his way might not comprehend his way weaknesses but when issues are reached by general consensus, it can be checked out by all members' viewpoints to make informed decisions, which seems more practical. Hence, as is clear we can look at the challenge with whole new set of eyes and in doing so, we maximize our chances of success and minimize the likelihood of failure in the certain situation.

Another aspect which I should point it out is about enthusiasm. In apposite words, by taking members' desires into account, they are encouraged to working as a team which is conducive to cooperating in the best way. Therefore, it goes without saying that not only are members more enthusiastic about teamwork which ~~is~~ culminate in being a great experience for them, but also it can bring success to the group as soon as possible, thereby collaborating to achieve that end.

Last but not least, working by an individual who cares about other members' opinion is easier owing to the fact that this person is easygoing and members are more comfortable to express their feeling about different subjects. On the other hand, a person who sticks to his way can transmit anxious and discouragement to a group. From my own experience, I had a classmate who stood up for her way of thinking when we was working in the group regardless of others' preference which caused decreasing others' confidence since they thought their wishes/urges are useless.

In the final analysis, although some people believe that the benefits of undertaking tasks by someone's way in the group greatly outweigh than the drawbacks, I strongly believe otherwise on the basis of the reasons that were mentioned above.
