

In future, more people will choose to go on holiday in their own country and not travel abroad on holiday.

Do you agree or disagree?

During centuries, travelling to new places has been one of the most exciting hobbies amongst mankind. People set planes to invest money and make the spare time to discover new places and broaden their perspective of life. I believe that in future people will expand their experience of travelling beyond their countries' borders and I have a couple of reasons to elucidate my point of view.

First and foremost, human's nature and curiosity will result in desire to discover new countries and continents as there is evidence throughout history to prove this fact. Christopher Columbus sailed a long way to America and built an empire there. People tend to visit new places and get familiar to different foods, cultures, fauna and flora and this will inevitably lead to travelling abroad.

Another point to mention is that by development of technology, there would be faster and easier ways of travelling. Although people are having/living/leading a more hectic lifestyle nowadays, the state-of-the-art facilities will pave the way to explore the world. Sophisticated means of transportation will be invented and people may travel across the earth /globe/world in just a blink. Besides, there is a widespread belief between academicians that in close future, people will be richer and more people can afford to travel to foreign countries.

In conclusion, human beings intrinsically adore-are keen to explore the world and therefore-thereby enrich their experience. On the other hand, the brand-new technology will facilitate this process. I myself am looking forward to seeing the time travel machine to be invented sooner!