

Some people think that schools should select students according to their academic abilities, while others believe that it is better to have students with different abilities studying together. Discuss both views and state your own opinion

Nowadays, the issue of education is highly controversial among people. Whereas many subscribe to the view that students who have the same academic abilities study in particular school, the other group has an opposing view. I absolutely agree with this notion that all types of students should be together.

In terms of genuine talent, when students are selected based on their gifts, it may result in an impressive improvement in some specific subjects or abilities. In other words, one aspect of life ~~exposure is exposed~~ constantly to difficult situations; therefore, problem-solving in this part of the mind might have a chance to thrive dramatically. Accordingly, a bright future is probably secure for them as long as their talent is ~~in high demand~~ ~~highly demanding~~ for society, which means they ~~gain-learn~~ how ~~to~~ easily ~~to~~ make money with their gift.

By contrast, not only could ~~different~~ students with a broad range of abilities study effectively but also, it is provided an opportunity to cooperate closely to acquire diverse knowledge from each other. Should they study and work together as a team, they will likely face unfamiliar conditions which will eventually lead to gaining varied abilities. That is to say, these graduates are sufficiently well-raised as a mature person to succeed in their later lives. The more abilities are nurtured, the more successful they will become since graduations are not reliant on just strength. Sounds good / sounds like a good idea

In conclusion, although emphasizing and bringing up only one capability seems like a great condition for children and even having a lucrative job results from it, a person might have less quality in other aspects of his life.
