

Some people think parents are responsible for transporting their children to school. Others think it is the government's responsibility.

Schoolgoers' transportation has always been a matter of concern for parents and the government. In this regard, some individuals argue that parents should take the responsibility for transporting their children to school because it is more secure. Some others s argue that it is the administration's s responsibility in order to assist family financially. I partially agree with both viewpoints.

On the one hand, children can be more secure by being taken to school by their parents. In other words, if parents took their children to school, it would prevent them from possible hazards. It means that when parents drop off their children to school or pick them up they are safer/in a safety conditions. For instance, a recent study showed that, most of children are at risk of accidents s when they come back home by buses and taxies. Therefore, parents should accept responsibility for transporting their children during school years because they will be secure.

On the other hand, some people rely on the government's support because it is more time saving for parents. It means that most parents lack the time to take their children to school in the morning because of their obligation at work . For example, imagine a family who have more than 2/two children and each of them is attending different schools and parents do not have time for multiple destinations. Thus, it is the authority's duty to assist family for transporting and they can save time.

To conclude, after analyzing what has been elaborated above, I partially agree with both viewpoints because I believe that parents should take care of their children when they go to primary school because they are kids/too young and in this way they will be safer. And also the government have the duty of supporting family and sending their children to school when they become adult and it is very time consuming for parents .
