

Many young people are leaving their homes in rural areas to study or work in cities. What are the reasons? Do the advantages of this development outweigh its disadvantages?

It is undeniable that in the contemporary world, a plethora of new generations are abandoning their homes in little towns to have a new lease of life in metropolitan and vibrant cities to have a better quality of education and job option. A number of causes lie behind these immigration ~~s-~~ events/this movement.

To begin with, there are two primary reasons why the youths are moving to towns. The First and ~~the~~ foremost cause is in remote areas people mostly suffer from lacks of fundamental facilities in ~~the~~ terms of education. In other words, big cities frequently offer high-quality universities, where state-of-the-art gadgets and equipment are placed-waiting for enthusiastic students to research in different subjects; ~~;~~ ; increasing their knowledge and being an effective person in their society. Furthermore, in small countries, young generations regularly face difficulties into finding a suitable job. Whereas citizens of towns have a greater employment opportunity.

Turning to the merits of this movement. One of the main positive points is that moving to bustling metropolises probably results in exposure to different educational courses and options. While in the ~~countries-country~~ young minds are limited with merely options as long as any universities exist. Secondly, multi-dimensional jobs are in only megalopolis, whereas in small rural areas, jobs rely on the basic needs of people living there. Thus, numerous people could not follow their career dreams. To exemplify, Silicon Valley which lies in the south of San Francisco is the cradle of technology where many nerds move to live their ambitious living. Living in busy cities, however, means ~~that~~ either losing touch with family and friends or feeling isolation at first.

In conclusion, nowadays moving to bustling towns is a highly controversial issue that shortages of educational facilities and a few workplaces might be the main reasons for this immigration. In my view, it is pretty positive for them in terms of education and job opportunities.
