

People living in big cities face many problems today. What are the problems? Should the government encourage people to live in regional towns?

Undoubtedly, a plethora of people are residents of bustling areas where a number of issues are lying. Now, the question that ~~arises/is raises-raised~~ is whether the official figures should persuade their citizens to move to little cities to suffer less.

Whereas bustling metropolises offer a broad range of facilities for their citizens, ~~they bring~~ thousands of problems ~~bring~~ as well. The first and foremost difficulty is that people living in big cities frequently suffer from different types of pollution. Several surveys cite the example of Tehran, where most of the time people face air pollution, particularly in cold seasons when inversion mostly happens. The other chief problem is ~~the house housing~~ prices ~~has have~~ escalated since the lands in the megalopolis ~~were are~~ scarce. That is to say, not only could young generations not afford to buy or even rent a little apartment, but also, they often face financial problems due to high living cost. The last one is insecurity, which is considered an inseparable component of busy towns, ~~which~~ mostly contributes to ~~imprisonmentcaptivation~~ of children in their homes playing with modern gadgets instead of being out and ~~collaborating interacting~~ with their peers. When they ~~were are~~ a child, they just followed some defined games' rules, not creating a new one, ~~and~~ they will probably be an uncreative person.

Now, is it highly required that governments convince urban people to move to small towns or non-urban areas? The answer would be yes ~~and so as long as~~ urgent actions are ~~to be~~ taken. The prime measure is those preparing overall needs, which ~~are~~ mostly missing in rural areas. ~~This-That~~ is, a majority of regional towns have inadequate amenities and essential facilities, and should governments persuade people to immigrate to other states in the country in order to achieve a correct balance, they must establish companies, factories, higher educational institutes. Hence, ~~it-this policy~~ elevates the standard of living in rural areas.

In conclusion, there are various problems in busy towns nowadays such as varied pollution, insecurity and high living costs that people have to deal with. The official figures ~~must~~ offer a wide range of facilities in villages to persuade people to stay there or even immigrate there.
