

Some people say that music is a good way of bringing people of different cultures and ages together.

To what extent do you agree or disagree with this opinion?

From the big bang of humans' culture until the last tick of history's clock, the human-being has been spiritually hardwired for art of all kinds. However, undeniably, music has been asserted as one of the most outstanding type of art, drawing everyones' attention and surpassing other kinds of artworks. Hence, regarding that a controversial debate has been raised over the matter whether or not it has the potential power to gather people with a wide range of varieties including cultures and ages. I strenuously concur with this idea that it lies in it's power to conquer the differences, and unify the multitudes despite of not being the same.

Unquestionably, all individuals have their own specific taste in relation to music, rooting in their cultures, ages as well as other factors including genres, races and so on. To clarify, pop music is often believed to be more popular by youngsters, though quite the opposite, traditional one is more favoured by olders. Besides, culture diversities bring about taste diversities, and those with different cultures do not share the same tastes. For instance, having not similar languages and dialects, people do not take pleasure from the astonishing songs of other cultures.

Nonetheless, there is a general consensus among dozens of musicaholics, myself included, that in spite of diversities, music is in each place and era. That is to say that there is a universal impulse to it, as it has its own specific language which is understood, appreciated and well responded by art fonders. Having the same language is not a pressing need to enjoy a piece of masterpiece, composed by a respected well-known musician. Furthermore, in the light of such fabulous art, not only do the international events like popular festivals and celebrations as well as sport competitions take place, but also it is instrumental in developing world commercial activities through the enticement of musical advertisements.

To recap, regardless of significant diversities which should not be taken for granted, music have the power to enrich an otherwise boring life of all cultures and ages, pushing the frontiers , touching the humans' soul and penetrating into hearts of its lovers.
