

Some people believe the aim of university education is to help graduates get better jobs. Others believe there are much wider benefits of university education for both individuals and society.

Discuss both views and give your opinion.

In the modern world it is fashionable among of students to continue their education in the university. Their main reason is achieving more popularity; subsequently having a decent overriding job is the one of the most contributing factors in to gaining both wealth and popularity. Besides, higher education not only could it help to improve students but also in macro vision increase capital human in society. In my opinion, both sides could be true if we choose to continue higher education wisely.

I believe that the former vision is the initial and primary role of education. It has dozens of benefits for individuals namely it could open up our horizons by with increasing our effective connections and marketability. Also, it could improve our abilities and skills. Furthermore, we could overcome the challenges in our life subsequently our confidence and maturity will grow enabling us and as a result, a sense of personal fulfillment develops.

In At my view, the latter side is the mature role of tertiary education, so everybody knows that there is powerful relation between personal success and social society success for instance society will gain from the contribution that the graduates can make to the economy. We are living in a competitive world, so countries need educated people in order to compete and prosper.

In conclusion, I believe that although higher education could not grantee for achieving a good job and having a developing country, it can play a main role in to land/gaining both of them and leading to a better future for individuals and society.
