

Nowadays, new educational organisations and authorities are discussing more than before ~~that~~ whether they have to spend money making more facilities on sports and social activities as well as classes and libraries or not, and over years, they have not reached an agreement yet. I, myself, think that the money allocated should be considered equally and I will illustrate my reasons below.

First of all, students attending universities or colleges are about eighteen years old, in other words, they have gone to school and studied about twelve years of their life and also in some cases, students are supposed to pass such a ~~very~~ competitive exam in order to enter the university or college, ~~so~~ ~~So~~ they tend to face the university's ~~ambience ambient~~ more attractive and equipped with modern facilities than their schools. Furthermore, many of the students tend to live apart from their parents. Some of them also immigrate to ~~another~~ ~~countries~~ ~~country~~ for further study. Accordingly, since they are living alone, they will have more free-time and the most appropriate place for spending their leisure-time would be inside the campus.

Secondly, based on psychological researches, students usually at the age of eighteen or ~~higher~~ /more tend to spend more time in groups, ~~so~~ ~~So~~ the university with enough facilities in sports and other social activities would have a better chance ~~of to~~ satisfying its students. In addition, if the students of the university from different fields and interests socialize in group activities, they will improve their knowledge of the other fields of study.

In conclusion, the important issue which should ~~be have been~~ considered by the government for improving students in many aspects is paying attention to students's leisure time as well as their studying. Who knows?, maybe participating in social activities or sports will make students understand their abilities better, so it could lead them to change their fields of study for a better future.
