

Do you agree or disagree with the following statement?

Always telling the truth is the most important consideration in any relationship between people.

Trustworthiness is one of the most positive characteristics that a person can hold. Every relationship can be sustainable if truth is ruled between parties. I believe in honesty in all of my relationships that I have, since it helps parties trust and rely on each other.

In fact, to build a healthy relationship, parties have to follow distinct points to keep it safe from any misunderstanding, such as, being responsible, trustworthy, honest and supportive. Although all these points are important, telling the truth is critically more significant than the rest.

Firstly, in order to feel safe in any relationship especially marital ones, parties should tell the truth all the time for their own good, so they can have faith in each other in different situations which they may confront. In ~~the~~ other words, no trust in relationship is like a car without gas. Therefore, the relationship won't work ~~and as well as~~ the car will not be able to ~~cannot~~ move, either.

Secondly, parties in any relationship need to know the reality related to the relationship. Thus, they can rely on each other not only in difficult particular circumstances but also the situation which needs to respect confidentiality. For instance, in financial relationship, parties have to work with each other in order to gain their goal. Therefore, they should be completely certain that the data which their parties have given them is surely reliable. In confidential matters, telling the truth plays a great role in getting done the particular work that the relationship had been made for.

Finally, being honest lets the parties in for example a friendship to experience the other kind of relationship like financial, ~~fiscal~~ or even marital ones. This is definitely valuable to have a trustworthy person around you in a great variety of aspects in life.

To sum up, as far as I am concerned, in any kind of bond, expressing the truth is the most important points that parties must have faith in.