

Some people think it would be a good idea for schools to teach every young person how to be a good parent.

Do you agree or disagree with this opinion?

Describe the skills a person needs to be a good parent.

Being a parent is an extremely huge burden. Anyone who is going to accept this responsibility should be prepared for it. Some of these related skills can be educated in schools or universities.

Some believe that school is the place where students should just learn some particular subjects issues like physics, math and chemistry, whereas I am opposed to with it. I maintain that these subjects do not suffice and some psychological and rearing courses for being an efficient parent is necessary for the raising of the future generations and the younger less age we learn about it, the more success we can reach. although it seems that we it had better discuss these issues in higher levels of education like universities where individuals would find them more seriously, there are some who cannot not entering universities. As a result, in my opinion, the best time to this end is teaching them at high school period careers.

With the advent of some sciences such as psychology in early twentieth century nowadays, our knowledge has increased ~~become more~~ about child rearing. There are some behaviors which we should deter like discrimination, corporal punishment, comparison, humiliation, offense which engender difficulty in our children's future personalities. We should strike a balance. In other words, neither being strict nor lenient seems reasonable. In order to provide~~Providing~~ facilities for our children, we should have sufficient income. That is to say, what is our children's right is enjoying a safe place for living and ~~being fulfilled~~ their basic needs being met.

To sum up, it seems that school is the best place for teaching how to become acceptable parents and we should observe some points as ~~+~~ mentioned above.
