some people believe ~~consider~~ that parents should train children how to be useful members of society since parents have their duty of training their children in a suitable way and teach them to be good in their social life. also, other people accept that school is the right place for teaching this. obviously there are many educational methods in school for teaching and affecting ~~on~~ children for this point and no one can deny that.

it can be clearly said ~~say~~ that it is parents's responsibility to give their children good/decent upbringing since they are young ~~childe~~ and teach them how they can find ~~found~~ distinction between wrong and right, in particular they should know some basic information about the environment besides these children will search for how to be responsible and be important persons in their social life. as a result, parents are models of behaviour and effective teachers for their children before school.

on the other hand, there is difference between school life and personal life. in school they learn the ways of being useful and reasonable. in other words, being worthy in society with the methods that have proved effective ~~they are proven~~ and we can rely on ~~them~~, methods that have been experienced ~~are full of experience and knowledge~~ so they can show and teach children how to be well-behaved appropriate.

to sum up, I personally ~~personality~~ believe that children need both of them together. they need to learn from their parents while they should get ready to be in society with knowledgeable ways.
