

Even though globalization affects the world's economies in a very positive way, its negative side should not be forgotten. DISCUSS

Globalization is a novel term that has vastly been used internationally in the recent decades. It is regarded as integration among nations in ~~terms of~~ economic and politic as well as social terms. It is obvious that it has both negative and positive points like other happenings. Although its disadvantages cannot be ~~denied eliminated~~, the positive points would benefit all countries.

The advocates of globalization believe that it can bond all countries as a one integrated world, so not only could citizens of developed countries benefit from developments in/of science and technology, but also individuals in poor countries certainly would have access to necessary assistance more easily and promptly. Furthermore, one of the most major changes that will occur in globalization is establishment of a large number of international companies which might decrease the percentage of ~~the~~ unemployment all over the world especially in poor countries where ~~the~~ laboring is a low-priced trade. In this case, both the employers and employee will win in that, the former could pay lower expenses to the labors, and the latter could find job vacancies in other countries.

On the other hand, globalization would widespread the consequences of countries' problems such as diseases, natural disasters, unemployment as well as advancements and economic improvements worldwide. In such a world without any boundary lines rarely could authorities control and prevent ~~from~~ propagation of misadventure/accidents. Dangerous diseases might pervade in short time and would turn into be made a terrible phenomenon and Terrorists would commute more effortlessly without much any strict monitoring.

In conclusion, while globalization could be considered a worthwhile event in which all people join a unique world regardless of in spite of their race, nationality or other aspects and country, it is likely to render the worldwide society prone to different threats. I tend to believe that despite the drawbacks of a united world, it is worth experiencing such great and unique occurrence all around the world.
