

Some people believe that unpaid community service should be a compulsory part of high school programmes (for example working for a charity, improving the neighborhood or teaching sports to younger children)

To what extent do you agree or disagree?

In traditional educational system, generally it focuses on some especially courses such as mathematics, chemistry and physics, however, students need to improve social aspects of their characters besides individual skills. Some say some unpaid social activities can play key role in this concern. This essay deals with argument for and against the topic.

From my point of view, unpaid community services for students who are in their teenage years have some obvious benefits. Firstly, it can boost students' character in terms of social skills. It means that, the general courses can lead to a materialistic attitude, namely continuing higher education and achieving a high-paid job. However, in my opinion, achieving result in success is a sine qua non, but it is not sufficient. On the other hand, societies need a future generation who are mature both individually and socially term. Undeniably, the modern world without understanding could not be favored, so for achieving the goal we require planning for next generation when they are at the age of learning, owing to the fact that, the lower less the age of the students, the more flexibility and acceptance accepted.

Secondly, some social activities lead cause to comprehend human values. Everybody knows that ethics moral and ethical cannot convey theoretical information per se. For knowing them, we should practice and feel them indeed. Community services can play an obvious role in honing children's critical abilities and respect of values.

Thirdly, I believe that no sooner do we implement this concern than it results in intellectual development.

However, there are drawbacks besides benefits. One of the potential disadvantages is that probably students spend more time on/for these activities and it will lead to/conduces to educational failure. Personally speaking, these activities might occupy children's mind and they drift apart main reason of these plans.

In conclusion, some community services not only are useful for children in respect of improving their personality but also they can build a brighter future for our nation.
