

Do you agree or disagree with the following statement?

Always telling the truth is the most important consideration in any relationship between people.

Who wants to be told something rather than the straightforward truth? The answer to the question is quite obvious since everyone either a young person or an adult, man or woman, and literate or illiterate averts telling or ~~to~~ being told a lie. Although in some certain, limited yet delicate situations s in which telling the truth may harm precious relations between people involved with the interaction among them, telling the truth may be preferred by the majority of people. In the shadow of the relaetively plain introduction, as far as I am personally concerned, I subscribe to the view that I prefer telling the truth, in light of the following statements reasoning the truth is most important consideration in any relationship between people.

First and foremost, reality is the unique valuable consideration in relations associated with business and economy where the people whose profits include the relation may benefit or be harmed. Hence, in the government, there is are inordinate legislation against those who take make action with any deceptive intent to defraud the public or any other association assocition. In the same way, the relations among the employees as well as the boss and employees must be lying lie based on in truth turth according to base on which everyone trusts each other.

In the second place, as anyone may acknowledge, telling the truth is not only important in the work environment, but also among family members each of which may enjoy the atmosphere in which everybody avoids deceiving anybody else. Considering the family in which the members who comprise it, the husband contines to conceal some issues/matters features in his life, important or not, willfully or ignorantly, and even with moral intent or not, and in the same manner for the wife, it is no accident that such a family will definitely not definetly remain stable for a long time.

Third, in consents where two or more people are involved in some kind of competition, telling the truth is not only the most important measure but also in many cases may be quite crucial. For example, suppose the athlete whose intent may lie in being successful in an international competition, in spite of stress, he or she should not use illegal drugs to cover his or her drawbacks, otherwise there are some strict laws against such an athlete and he or she will be definitely deprived of any other competition in the world.

Consequently, in my opinion, almost all the people cherish telling the truth in any environment.
