

Some people think that younger generations are becoming less and less polite. Do you agree or disagree with this statement? Give your opinion and examples.

Children's behavior is a common controversial issue and they are out of the spotlight especially in terms of respect for on the elders. Some say the new generation has/have become less as polite as than the past. This essay deals with the argument in both aspects of the topic.

In the modern world, ubiquity of changing makes inevitable and the range from some facilities and equipment to human relationships. In my opinion, in this day and age, one of the significant changes ing is relationships s between members of families especially when we want to compare two generations, the last generation and the new one/generation, we observe a huge gap between them in terms of respect to on the elders. Obviously, a lot of factors can cause this issue. From my point of view, one of the clear reasons is parents. These days with many parents working, families don't spend spent enough time together. It means that when parents works longhigh work-hours every day certainly they don't have sufficient energy so that they cannot bring their children up acceptably. In such circumstances, a common solution for parents is using child-care centers for their children. Everybody knows that kindergartens for instance, care for comprise a wide range of children in respect of cultures and type of families and behavior, so when children stay together the whole of day, they can learn a variety of things in both sides whose which usually its drawbacks usually outweigh privileges.

The second reason, from my perspective, is overusing the Internet. Frankly, one of the by-products of the Internet is knowledge of a variety of subjects without considering of the range of users. Beyond reasonable doubt, that a lot of them are unsuitable for children. Some sexual relationship or violent and crime images are two certain examples which lie ahead of children when they access the Internet with lack of observation towards their parents.

In conclusion, when it comes to changing, not only should adults the elder should try to preserve some valuable valuble meaning side by side of using new facilities and technology but also they should convey them to the next generation with top-notch quality. On the other hand, the government can play a key role in this situation through adopting some approaches for limiting access of the Internet especially for the children.
