

In some countries children have strict rules of behavior, in other countries they are allowed to do almost anything they like. To what extent should children have to follow rules.

There have been different approaches for nurturing ~~children the child~~ over recent years all around the world. Educationalists in some countries try to promote the new trend in which children could behave arbitrarily without any limitation. Nevertheless, some believe that parents should teach them to obey the rules which are enforced in different situations.

To begin with, it is believed that children are of complex nature which needs different requirements to fulfill its ~~optimum perfect~~ functionality. ~~this it~~ is to say that, children need to have an opportunity to apply themselves freely in the way that some of their traits such as, creativity could be developed. Thus, by exerting power and energy to ~~holds~~ individuals' attitudes and behaviors in particular way, their creativity would be gradually diminished. Furthermore, it is proved that children ~~who which~~ are used to be excessively obedient are more likely to be dependent and consequently, have lower self-confidence. to put it simply, the ones who ~~were was~~ raised in ~~a~~ rule-oriented ~~environment~~ tend to be given ~~a defined~~ way to perform their task in adulthood.

On the other hand, some others assert that children should be taught the rules and facts before embarking on finding new ways of living, ~~so -so~~, they need assistance to be guided ~~in a to~~ correct way. Furthermore, it has been proved that every person who is not obliged to follow any rules in childhood might be more rebellious and ~~law-breaking breaker~~ in adulthood, ~~therefore~~, not only should ~~we try be tried~~ to rear creative and self-starter children, but also their social behavior should be developed which requires obedience.

In conclusion, although some educationalists argue that children should demonstrate their own nature freely, some others believe that this approach might ~~be~~ result in more chaos in society. I ,myself, believe that parents should define the main way for their children and let their creativity and initiative ~~would~~ be improved without pressure.
