

Universities should accept equal numbers of male and female students in every subject.

To what extent do you agree or disagree?

Our world has been undergoing many massive changes over the last decades. The girls who used not to be admitted by universities due to their gender nowadays can freely pursue their education in various colleges. However, I definitely oppose the policy of the equal number of male and female students being admitted ~~the equal number of male and female students~~ regardless of their ability and talent by universities.

Obviously, the right of having the same choice in education including opting for universities and majors for girls and boys is a valued achievement, but it does not mean that universities should take pity on (pity ~~on~~) female students and accept them just because of their gender, in which case some talented men are deprived of entering university. It/this can have a negative and damaging effect on the whole society and engender violence and resentment against girls into boys. Secondly, when male students have to pay equal university fees and taxes compared with female students, the acceptance of students based on the gender can be interpreted as a kind of discrimination against them. Thirdly, there are some majors which men have a naturally inclination towards ~~them~~ like some arduous physical studies like civil engineering. On the other hand, there are some particular subjects like nursing with a higher chance to be chosen by girls, whereas by adopting this policy these potential and opportunities disappear.

In conclusion, I personally think that acceptance of students by college must be based on the how-capability and talent an individual possesses, and in this process some unrelated factors like the gender should never be taken into account.
