

In many countries children are engaged in some kind of paid work. Some people regard this as completely wrong, while others consider it a valuable work experience, which is important for learning and taking responsibility. What is your opinion?

It is believed by many individuals that children who are involved in jobs will be more successful in the futures, while some others might be against the cited idea because of the harmful effects which completely change their personality, mentality as well as their attitudes. completely.

To begin with, some people argue that children might gain several positive achievements when they are involved in work places. not only would their social and physical abilities be improved, but also they could can learn to take /shoulder responsibility which could play a vital role in on their life in adulthood. In addition, with effort they apply themselves to earn money, and they are more likely to value it and spend it more wisely, so they would learn how to manage and save their money for their necessary commodities.

On the other hand, the advocates assert that although early employment making money in childhood may hone social skills, it obviously brings about irreparable education lapse which may keep abduct them away from their ultimate goal and keeping them in routines which are is far from a professional life that they always keep always in their mind. Moreover, pushing children to work for money might guide them to a materialistic world in which their soul would be polluted by economics affairs in the way that they forget their childhood. Therefore, their natural development of their personality may be disrupted and the pre-mature individuals would be formed who are completely are away from a healthy and natural character.

In conclusion, while some maintain that encouraging children to work and gain money could be useful for them, some other educationalists s think that it would ruin all their vision and goals, so it should be prevented as long as possible. I, myself, believe that it might be beneficial for children to experience working with others and earning money. However, they should be overseen/monitored limited and guided with their parents not to be misled by money and forget their desire and major objectives which can be achieved through focusing on their education.
