

Education

Some people believe the aim of university education is to help graduates get better jobs. Others believe there are much wider benefits of university education for both individuals and society.

Discuss both views and give your opinion.

Education and related areas has been always a controversial issue to talk about. one of the most highlighted one is the possible approaches for higher education as a functional point of view. Hence some people opt for the nowadays viral assumption which says the higher degree you obtain, the better job you will hunt. by contrast, in opposite the other group are of the opinion that university education, many of which benefit both people and society, covers a much wider range of merits.

Those who believe in significant correlation between university degrees and the better job opportunities usually maintain that the job market has become highly competitive and professional so that this very professionalism has put the university graduates in demand. In addition to this, they mention that those types of work which do not need any special education are no longer available or are considered either low-level or low-paid. Therefore, young people should have at least one higher degree to acquire a proper job position. Thus, the secondary-school education aims s for a secure career path in the future.

On the Contrary, the opponents state/argue/maintain draw plenty of inferences to support the idea of comprehensive invasive advantages of university education. They often reason discuss that not only does it does lead to more and better options in terms of job hunting, but also opens opening new horizons s for the new generation. For instance having university experience is considered as a major contributor to social development on account of providing youngsters with an opportunity to communicate with a variety of people with different or even sometimes contradictory social backgrounds. Moreover, they also would have a chance for a self-scrutinizing. consequently, they would learn more about their interests as well as their preferences which helps them to become a person whom their society benefits from.

To sum up, although going to university may pave the way toward career success, it would be is being so naive to think that it is the only function we can expect, and therefore, we need to reconsider our expectations regarding higher education to see it in perspective more accurately and understand the way we may reap rewards of university education
