

Research indicates that the characteristics we are born with have much more influence on our personality and development than any experiences we may have in our life. Which do you consider to be the major influence?

There are lots of elements that mold individuals' characters for which many researches have been conducted /carry out, conduct, do, perform, pursue, undertake by educationalists globally. Some researchers maintain that our innate qualifications are of a greater influence rather than acquired ones, while others disagree with the above idea.

Some believe that everybody was born with a unique instinct which not only might shape the general character and behavior, but also would lead them to a specific way of living and ultimately defined goals. That is to say, that acquiring skills or experiences could just accelerate trends of attributes' developments. For instance, we cannot change an introvert person into an extrovert -one completely just by simple experiences, but they could be modified in the different environments, so it is obvious that even different numbers of people who have the same experiences might totally differ from each other.

On the other hand, some psychologists maintain that each person was born with several different innate characteristics and those were nurtured with different experiences which would become their dominant dominate personality and behavior. They believe that mankind could also create new behavior by choosing different lifestyles. They cite a lot of examples of famous people who used to be addicted but and gave it up after they come up with new attitudes and find their way destructive. In stark contrast, we have examples of geniuses people who ruin their abilities without using their talents in the right ways. We could both change ing and create ing desirable desire qualification in ourselves by being perseverant tce in practicing and experiencing new performance.

In conclusion, while some argue that talents might affect personality more widely than experiences, others think that experiences which we gain will gradually shape our personality. I, myself, believe that our instinctive abilities have a considerable impact upon our main characteristics; nevertheless our experiences could bring about much more effects on our daily lives which could reform people 's attitude, behavior as well as personality.