

Successful sports professionals can earn a great deal more money than people in other important professions. Some people think this is fully justified while others think it is unfair. Discuss both these views and give your own opinion.

These days, all aspects of our life have been intertwined with money and business and sport is not an exception. A huge capital/investment has ~~have~~ been dedicated in the sport industry and in the meanwhile some professional athletes have become millionaires ~~billionaires~~ overnight. This trend has triggered/caused ~~causes~~ a lot of controversy arguments over the big pay gap between other professional careers and sports ~~ones~~.

Many people believe that there is not a fair condition among high-level and indispensable professions and their counterparts in the area of sport. They explain that those who work ~~who works~~ in a vital career have ~~has~~ to endeavor more than a sportsman, whether before success or after it. For example, a general practitioner has to study more than five years and after spending several years as an intern in difficult situations and under strict rules, finally maybe they receive one-tenth of a successful athlete's pay. Moreover, in comparison with the benefits of these professions for society, the higher priorities are given to someone like an engineer, a doctor or a firefighter by opponents of this overpayment who believe that watching sport matches ~~in on~~ TV or in stadiums is not the real needs ~~of for~~ people but which we are convinced they convince us to accept this inequality.

On the other hands-side, some may argue that there are ~~is~~ a few people in sports professions as sports superstars who make unusual money and in other words, they have an extremely special talent which entitles ~~deserves~~ them to these incomes ~~money~~. Furthermore, the mutual relationship between business and sport is stronger than other realms and this relation brings money for athletes. Companies use ~~of~~ people's keenness to watch sports events and follow sports players for broadcasting their advertisements whose ~~which the~~ superstars ~~of these commercials~~ are sportsmen or sportswomen.

In conclusion, we should consider all factors which are effective in the level of income in each profession and although from a logical viewpoint, it is not reasonable that ~~which~~ someone like a soldier who leaves his home and may ~~maybe~~ never come back, receives a low ~~the lowest~~ salary, these are the excitement and passion which attract ~~drive~~ money and wealth.
