

Many criminals after serving their time behind bars usually commit crimes again. Why do you think it is so? Give causes and your solution to it.

Today, ~~the~~ society's viewpoint on criminals and their rights as ~~a~~ citizens has changed and people are more concerned ~~ed~~ about this part of the community who owing ~~to~~ known or unknown reasons have to do something wrong or illegal/engage in illicit activities. However, although many methods have been tested in backing these people, the official statistics manifest that a tremendous part of prisoners repeat their criminal behaviour. (reoffend)

In the first step, we should review our punishment's methods. For many years, we have sent offenders to jail to punish and keep away them away from society but we had not thought about its effectiveness and in fact, except some advanced countries, others lack have not have any practical plan for this period. Obviously, culprits are required to be been-trained during their sentence, ~~h~~ However, the question is ~~that~~-what the kind of training? Governments and institutes must dedicate a budget for empowering offenders to new, useful skills which will give them more opportunities after being released from prison or in some cases like tackling domestic violence, we need some psychologists who help perpetrators to understand their mental problems and control them.

Monitoring and supporting criminals after ending their sentence is the ~~importantly~~, next important, step. When we free these people in society, where usually no one supports them and all the circumstances are available for them to turn to crime again (situations are provided to absorb them again to the crime area), it should not be expected that prisoners convert to ~~the~~ normal citizens. Someone who has been recently released, needs demand to care like a teenager who is faced with a lot of, new problems and in this trend Police, social services, and voluntary agencies are responsible for to these vulnerable people to start a new life.

In conclusion, although all reasons why someone turns to crime again have not been identified entirely, I believe that understanding of the real ex-criminals' demand and problems and protecting them whether during punishment or after it are the main solutions for the victims of circumstances.
