

Some people prefer renting than buying a home. What are the advantages and disadvantages of renting your home?

It is true that some people decide to rent a home for their life instead of buying one for living which definitely has some benefits and drawbacks for each case.

Living in a rented home could have some benefits for the person/occupant. Firstly, these groups are free to live in every region of the town and they do not have to limit themselves just to a specific area, so if they change their job, they could easily move to the vicinity of their company which is considerably beneficial to the personal time management wasting in traffic. Secondly, if they are not happy from-with the home or the neighbours, they do not have to tolerate the current situation. Consequently, they can find a far more convenient place with the desired facilities triggering the happiness and the inspiration in the life. Living in different types of accommodation during the life gives the opportunity to know more people and experience a richer social relationship.

It is undeniable that renting an apartment is expensive. Every month we pay an un-non-refundable rent. Buying a house is economical even if we afford it with a loan, although we have to repay it back each month, after a specific time we will have our own home for retired years. On the other hand, we have the possibility of planning the decorations according to as our style, while in the rented homes due to constantly moving we cannot perform achieve it.

In conclusion, both above cases are dependent to-on our life style and our characteristic. Living in a rented home is expensive but most of the people are happy to experience from-experiencing different places near their work. On the other hand, buying a house is economical and also contributes to happiness in retired age but limits us to a specific region.
