

Today, more and more students are deciding to move to a different country for higher studies. Do you think that the benefits of this outweigh the problems?

Recent years have witnessed the growing number of students going abroad to have the chance of a higher-quality education. Although studying overseas has various issues to tackle, I believe the advantages will eventually overcome the drawbacks.

That developed countries consist of numerous, world-known, successful universities which are dreamed-destination for smart students is an undeniable fact. Many students try their best to reach one of these study and research centers in which ~~they it has~~ provided high-level facilities for students which ~~is-do~~ not exists in developing and undeveloped countries. I consider this to be the first and the most significant benefit of moving to a foreign country for studying. Graduating from a popular ~~/well-reputed/prestigious~~ university or college helps people to find better ~~/decent jobs opportunities~~. ~~It is also This also is~~ indisputable that having a better career leads to a more comfortable, wealthy life.

Moreover, moving to another country helps youths grow up faster. They learn to live ~~undependably independently~~ and cope with all ~~the~~ living issues thoroughly on their own. For instance, they have to cook, go shopping, rent a house and pay the bills which all result in transforming them from a young person to a mature one. Besides, by living in a new country not only do the students expand their knowledge of life and its problems, also they learn different cultures and customs belonging to the destination country and the new international friends while they become an expert on a foreign language.

On the other hand, considering all advantages above, we should mention some disadvantages that this new life style can bring. Namely, some of the new arrivals, specifically those who ~~comecame~~ from a very different culture or ~~from~~ undeveloped ~~/developing~~ countries, may not be able to deal with ~~the~~ new situation which may leads to homesickness and worse than that, depression. ~~Even-more~~ ~~Furthermore~~, studying ~~a major~~ in an unfamiliar language has its own hardships. What's more, studying abroad is extremely expensive and ~~perhaps is~~ not affordable ~~to many~~ (for everyone's pocket). Sometimes the new students have to work in night shifts in order to pay the education's fees.

Generally speaking, if a student is determined to promote his/her future life by studying in a high-level college or university abroad, he/she should tackle all the problems that this choice may contain when the merits are outweigh its the downsides of it.
