

Some animal species are now completely extinct. Many people believe that we should prevent this from happening in the future. Do you agree or disagree with this statement?

Today, the trend of animals extinction has ~~been~~ become more faster than the past and every day some animals disappear. At thi rate/Now and by this pace of species vanishing, many are concerned about the earth and its creatures on the horizon and some are totally irresponsible.

The first and foremost reason for preventing the remaining species from extinction is the importance of diversity for our life and also the earth. Unfortunately/regrettably most people are not aware that each animal or plant plays a specific role in our planet ecosystem and if they vanish, our ecosystem will face many troubles. For instance, when the number of butterflies decreases significantly in an area, fertility in plants will be reduced and not only ~~it~~ will it cause death for many animals but also it will have serious excessive impacts on our agriculture which in some cases, ~~it~~ can lead to famine.

In addition, most of the time, the meaning of beauty is also defined based on the diversity. Imagining a world where only humans with a few tame animals like dogs or cats are living, is monotonous scary. Watching African landscapes, full of different animals is an unrepeatable experience for most people and actually is a hardwired, evolutionary attitude in humans and it is an encouraging message for us that the earth is still alive.

In conclusion, although some believe that the most animals in the world are useless and just occupy the earth, these kinds of ideas have originated from the lack of understanding of nature and can cause destruction for beauty, life and even our blue planet.
