

the statement is asking ~~about~~ whether treating your pet like family, ~~it~~ can be a very controversial subject but in my view we should treat ~~pets~~ them as a member of family due to the results we can see inside the family itself, for ~~instant~~ instance first of all when we treat ~~well and kindly to~~ our pets well and kindly and act like they ~~are~~ belong to our family, our children will observe it and they will learn how they should treat ~~with~~ other members of family and even maybe outside. Second, the way that our children treat with their pets is the way that can show the result of their behavior in future with other members of the family and therefore it can be very useful to teach them to love everyone and everything that is around them. Third, they can see their pets as their own children and ~~they~~ can learn how they can be responsible and ~~how they should~~ take care of someone else by feeding them, taking them out for a walk ~~and ... so forth~~.

~~in on~~ the other hand, pets can ~~replace~~ be placed as a children for those married couples who can't ~~conceive a child~~ have a baby and they can fill their emptiness ~~of that baby~~ with a pet, they will shower their dog or kitten with love and the pet loves them in return. Aside from all of these, pets even can be a good ~~replacement~~ for someone who has lost one of their ~~his/her~~ family member like ~~his/her~~ their spouse/partner, they can spend the rest of their life by getting connected with their pet and somehow fill the void that they feel inside them selves.

in summaery spending money on getting a pet can be much/ a lot/way ~~very~~ better than many other alternatives and if you care about them, they will appreciate it and show their love and care toward you.
