

Today More and more tourists are visiting places where conditions are difficult, such as the Sahara Desert or the Antarctica. What are the benefits and disadvantages for tourists who visit such places?

Recently nowadays many people prefer to visit unusual places instead of famous cities or popular museums. Dangerous areas such as Antarctica or the Sahara Desert are being visited by an ever increasing number of ~~amongst the most visited places by~~ tourists. That visiting such breathtakingly beautiful places might threaten visitors' safety is an undeniable fact, but still many insist on traveling to such places /destinations/areas/venue/sites.

Those against /People who are against traveling to dangerous areas think argue that ~~this~~ these kinds of travels are risky and can put the traveler's life into danger. That discovering new places is life threatening is undeniable. In fact, this group of people prefer peace and quiet ~~places instead of over excitement passion~~ and discovery. A good example of this group could be my father, who was a true adventurer during his youth young ages, and gradually become a conservative preferring a quiet resort.

On the other hand, people who travel to weird places are trying to break their routines, looking for excitement, and I think unexpected experiences give them a kind of satisfaction. In fact they enjoy exploring new places such as caves or untouched /pristine jungles. They claim it gives them a sense of discovery. The other point is that traveling to unknown areas requires a high level of physical wellness.

In conclusion, I think believe adventurous journeys have more benefits than usual trips. ~~+~~ ~~think~~, traveling to unsafe places requires a physical wellness in addition to a different viewpoint. In other words, Traveling to unusual places brings s a unique experience that a typical travel can never produce/give such a valuable experience.
