

Many museums charge for admission while others are free.

Do you think the advantages of charging people for admission to museums outweigh the disadvantages?

Museums can play an important cultural role in everyone's life. Taking care of our ancient heritage is very important ~~and but~~ needs money. I will evaluate both the positive and negative aspects of entrance fees. Although at first glance we may prefer free entrance, I believe advantages of charging for tickets are more.

There are many benefits for an entrance fee. ~~one~~ One of which is with this money they can earn their operating costs. For example the monthly salary of guards, electricity, renovation and maintenance cost. Moreover, with this money they can finance their research and development cost. For example projects relating to exploring ancient antiques or building new structures. With this budget museums can buy these antiques from market and black market in order to protect them. With strong museums' strong power, antiques will not go to some private galleries, as a result, these ~~creatures-objects~~ will not be stocked ~~where they do not belong in private galleries~~. Another important issue is when museums sell tickets they can adjust their budget accordingly ~~to that~~. They can plan for their cost and projects. This adjustment results in more efficiency. Besides, when people pay money for it, they consider it more important than the time it is free.

On the other hand, entrance fees can prevent poor people ~~from attending to attend~~ museums. The cultural effects of museums may be needed by all social classes. Attending ~~to~~ these places wouldn't go amiss for everyone.

In conclusion, not only is an admission fee necessary but also inevitable. In order ~~for to~~ all social classes ~~to can~~ benefit from museums, it ~~is~~ suggested that museums design discount and entry packages for special occasions.
