

Some students like to take distance-learning courses by computer. Others prefer to study in traditional classroom settings with a teacher. Consider the advantages of both options and make an argument for the way the students should organize their schedule.

Both traditional and electronic learning can provide significant and different experiences for students. There are many benefits for distance-learning courses.

One of the most important advantages is the ability to attend classes at your convenience. This is vital especially for students who have a full time job since it allows them to continue working and manage their schedule with more flexibility.

Another huge advantage for international students who have limited language knowledge is the chance to listen to lectures more than once.

On the other hand, there are advantages to attending traditional classes. Its formal structured environment is beneficial for students who are not highly motivated. In addition, it is more likely to develop personal relationships with teachers and other students. Having face to face relationship with others in the class not only helps you not only learn better, but also have a deeper positive psychological effect. You will have the opportunity to study in groups and form new friendships. It will also become possible to get an immediate response to questions by just raising your hand and asking what you want, rather than send (. You will not have to send) emails and wait for a response.

In conclusion, there are advantages for attending both e-learning and traditional courses. By participating in distance learning courses, students can work independently and manage their time. Also being able to listen to lectures once again would be very helpful. By attending traditional classes, they can make relationships and experience group learning.
