

Individuals can do nothing to change society. Any new developments can only be brought about by governments and large institutions. How far do you agree or disagree?

Perhaps the majority of people would agree that huge changes are caused by the governments and large organizations. However, from my perspective, the individuals can influence ~~on~~ society and ~~they~~ can lead to drastic changes.

The first and perhaps the most significant reason is that affluent individuals s set up a new foundation for deprived people in deprived areas s and the obvious advantages of this behavior which motivates s other peers to do this merciful action. Furthermore, the doctors who try to make find new a treatments/cure for needy people without any payment . ~~This activity~~ have has a positive side-effects on society 's behavior and their beliefs.

The next positive aspect I would like to consider is that the governments need their nations' support to develop their countries and infrastructures. For instance, constructing and developing railway systems, motorways, public institutions and hospitals require financial ly support by private backers /sponsors and investors. Hence, this bidirectional participation is compulsory.

For an overall outlook, ~~the~~ individuals are capable of bringing crucial trends and can effect changes the same as the officials and public corporations.
