

In many countries, people are moving away from rural areas and towards urban areas.

Why do you think that is?

What problems can this cause?

(Mona meschi)

In the past few decades, villagers' immigration is-has been a phenomenona that is growing rapidly and overpopulation is happening, especially, in the third world countries. This issue is the result of industrialization. Hence, administrations make every effort to tackleing this worrying trend and finding long term and short term solutions to prevent this problem from growinggrowth.

Most of experts argue that unemployment is the main cause of moving away from villages because Farming and ranches are no longer cost-effective for villagers. The other reason which may be true to some extent is better life quality in cities. For example in Iran, despite of development programs of the country, the government has always focused on big cities to be developed from a variety of aspects. Another reason which may be true is younger immigrants try to be free and have more privacy via living in big cities where they can get lost in the crowd.

Obviously, this issue have-has many negative side effects. Surely, cities would be more populated and crowded as well as housing costs and traffic jams will increases. Available job opportunities will be reduced even for citizens, so illegal jobs, such as peddling selling will be created. Another considerable impact is unofficial settlement. In-as a result, cultural and social problems will occur, which leading to crime growth and security decrease.

In conclusion, I would say that if administrators does not find a proper solution for this harmful problem, all the villages will be ruined and also in the cities none of the citizens will have even the minimum of quality of life.
