

More and more qualified people are moving from poor to rich countries to fill vacancies in specialist areas. Some people believe that by encouraging the the movement of such people, rich countries are stealing from poor countries. Others feel that this is only part of the natural movement of workers around the world.

Opinion?

Solution?

People have always been immigrating to better places to seek ~~for~~ better opportunities. Today we have witnessed ~~of~~ condemnationing of modern countries for stealing their elite youth by giving them facilities and higher salaries in order to use their mind, experience, art or any capability they are expert in. according to a census, as we can see around us, Usually these staff are from poor countries whose which ~~their~~ community needs them more than anywhere else.

Arbitrary migration is a golden choice for many ~~of~~ talented students and experts whom who prefer to leave family and weak wonky hometown despite ~~of~~ themselves, toward a wider field of opportunities in order to shine by their skills, collecting respect, money and comfort. Poor countries usually take these migrations for granted, and make them run away out of boarders-borders by many management deficiencies like, unfair favoritism, lack of facility, low salaries, banning them from professional activities especially for criticisms-critics who are against their governments' activities or many other reasons. Teachers, engineers, artists, athletes, nurses, skilled workers and intellectuals are a country's investments who a lot of time and money have been spent on them. Compassionate governments try to keep usable-useful citizens to make them satisfiedy in the time of fruition. Now tell me why shouldn't those who don't care ~~of about~~ this loss shouldn't compensate? I believe losing missing them is the smallest punishment they have bestowed on themselves and their nation.

If we think morally, it is not fair, using public free services, education, in hope of the day when they will become a responsible member of that society to rebuild it, instead, use that facilities to leave their country with its pain and weakness, immigrate to a better place that is already flourished.

In-on the other hand, how long is a person's life? Should they sacrifice themselves in a country that government doesn't have any responsibility about them?

Not only me I, but no one else could judge them. No one even could stop them. The only solution is to make them more satisfiedy, making them aware of their higher responsibility.
