In many places, new homes are needed, but the only space available for building them is in the countryside. Some people believe it is more important to protect the countryside and not build new homes there. What is your opinion about this?

In the past decades, the needed facilities for living and life expectancy hope for living among human beings has been increasing, hence the growth of the population. As a result, we require more houses to put a roof over above people's head. One answer to this problem could be building new houses in the countryside. Although, this solution has its own disadvantages, I believe that it is a better response to our problem.

The first negative side of expanding cities is by raising the number of the residents of the cities, we will face troubles such as pollution therein those. Noise pollution and air pollution has already been a problem in large cities and it seems like helping to make more contamination if we put more people in them.

On the other hand, not only can we distribute and decentralize the population, but also we can prepare an undoubtedly favorable situation to bring more provisions to our rural area, if we guide our citizens to live in the countryside. There always has always been some critique criticism that our villages are not well equipped. But when more people are living there, the government would be convinced to assign more budget for there. Therefore, it would be easier for our villages to grow.

Unfortunately, if we make our countryside larger, there would be some consequences like harming the_nature. Whenever the humans put set their foot in an untouched/pristine nature, they ruin it to create a livable situation for themselves. The more populated a place becomes, the more damages we cause.

On-in conclusion, by constructing new houses in rural areas we can prevent from more pollution in metropolises and also it would be an opportunity to equip our villages. However, there would be some harms to the nature. So, we should make our best effort to respect the nature we are living in and keep it safe and sound.
