

Disruptive school students have a negative influence on others. Students who are noisy and disobedient should be grouped together and taught separately. Do you agree or disagree? Give reasons for

Presence of noisy and disobedient pupils in school classes seems to be inevitable. This fact may make both teachers and other students irritated. To address this issue, it has been suggested by some psychologists that these students should be segregated from the others in schools. This practice, however, may affect both groups of students negatively.

Firstly, if the noisy students be are separated from the others, they might feel isolated. This attitude probably led them to grow severe complexes, and consequently get impacted adversely in their future, and perhaps they would be a felon, criminal or addicted. ~~In best-case scenario, it may weaken their social skills which would result in less-fewer job opportunities, and failure in marriage, etc.~~ Therefore, it is recommended that, teachers take these pupils into account, and try to appreciate their contribution to the class.

The separation of noisy students s may cause unpleasant effects on their other classmates as well. In spite of the interruption caused by disobedient students, an adequate class most certainly needs relatively small fun which is probably brought by these naughty pupils unless. ~~Unless~~ the class might be boring, and no one would use it sufficiently.

We must also consider that this naughtiness is emerged from the context of ~~the adolescence-ages~~, and if we attempt to shut this down, unrecoverable influences may invade this budding flourished generation.

Thus, teachers and schools s have ~~magnificent-major~~ responsibilities for ~~these-this~~ category of students. They must be involved in class activities, assessments and tests as much as the other students. If this happens, it will be in all the students' interest; and both will be satisfied.
