

Some people believe that allowing children to make their own choices on everyday matters (such as food, clothes and entertainment) is likely to result in a society of individuals who only think about their own wishes. Other people believe that it is important for children to make decisions about matters that affect them.

Discuss both these views and give your own opinion.

The question of how much freedom should be given to the children (children should be given) is one of the most old-age controversial debates facing humans in twenty-first century. Some people feel that letting children ~~to~~ do whatever they want, could ~~ruined~~ their future life by making them selfish, unbearable individuals. While the others express that, any society needs strong and independence-independent citizens which would not come true unless with nurturing their self-reliance in their childhood. In this essay, I will explore both points of view before giving my own opinion of each.

On the one hand, some scientists opine that when parents give their offspring ~~a~~ boundless liberty, he/she would become a self-centered person who cannot accept any other opinion other than his/hers. This characteristic would encounter many problems s as a member of family or even as a citizen of any society.

On the other hand, some psychological researches reveal that if you want to raise a well-behaved ~~child~~ child, you must let him/her ~~to~~ decide for at least his/her daily ~~basis~~-matters, this attitude would help youngsters to learn how to make a choice for more important decisions in their life. In other words, this could be a simple practice for their further adulthood issues. Furthermore, this viewpoint states s that if parents always decide for children and deter them from taking responsibility ~~of~~ for their own possible mistakes, they would become ~~a~~ weakly fragile-minded persons.

At last, in my opinion, the main conclusion to be drawn from this discussion is that there must be a balance. Helping children to make their own decision not only would not spoiled them, but also could help to foster a creative responsible generation. However, parents must take some boundaries into consideration to prevent such mentioned upcoming problems.
