

Nowadays, people living in large cities face many problems in their daily lives. What are these problems? Do you think the government should encourage people to move to smaller towns?

At this point in time, almost all of the masses who live in the metropolises have encountered substantial woes, some of which accompany these citizens from dawn to dusk. This area, hence, is one of the prominent subjects where the authorities should intervene.

The predominant issue which large cities have been coping with in recent years is most certainly population growth. Since a vast majority of the facilities have been served in these cities, people have a pronounced tendency, slowly but surely, to emigrate from small towns, suburban and rural areas to the metropolises. This phenomenon has brought an array of serious impediments. Traffic jams, boundless construction growth, and above all, all kinds of pollutions are the noticeable cases in point. These mentioned ills have led people to a grave situation. By a way of an example, they mostly live in cramped residences or ~~they~~ struggle with fewer job vacancies, and shortage of the prosperities, such as supplies, and medical care.

When these obstacles come to the crunch, the government must enter the equation. The vital practice would be the decentralization from large cities by fulfilling attraction in small ones. Individuals practically settle in zones where their welfares are decently ensured. ~~Thereby therefore,~~ allocating adequate facilities for each province ~~is~~ not only will absorb numerous crowds, but it will be in all the citizens' interest.

To sum up, daily troubles in large cities is hastening as the time goes by. People from all walks of life are ~~being suffering suffered by~~ overcrowding as well as less welfare coverage. Had governments implemented more effective policies, ~~now~~ people would ~~be living have lived~~ in better conditions; even for those who live in smaller towns or ~~the~~ countryside.
