

Individuals can do nothing to change society. Any new developments can only be brought about by governments and large institutions. How far do you agree or disagree?

Amin

Radical changes made in the community are usually brought by both large and small foundations ~~and that of small ones as well as including~~ individuals. Although many believe that governments are ~~critical-instrumental into~~ creating different revolutions in various aspects, some maintain that influential individuals can potentially divert the destination of societies with great achievements. This essay focuses on ~~my-the~~ idea as to why large organizations are not the only ones who can do so.

First and foremost, it ~~is-goes~~ obviously without saying that very extensive developments always may easily be gained by gigantic groups such as governments or multi-national companies. Possessing ~~reach-rich~~ facilities as well as well-known, yet creative, members, large institutions have the opportunity to implement satisfactory innovations into our society, at well. Social networks filling most our lives are the textbook example in this respect as they are developed by well supported companies.

At the other extreme, however, over history there ~~are-have been~~ famous discoveries made by ordinary people who were, in some cases, not wealthy at all. That is where brilliant talents, abilities, diligent endeavor, and occasionally excellent chances come in. Providing ~~some-onesomeone~~ follows upon ~~his-their~~ new idea with ultimate attempts, ~~he-they~~ will be most likely to affect everyone in the community in spite of their tendency to prevent the recent changes.

In additions, ~~taking advantage of tapping-into~~ their situations, some small-scale companies which emerge in suitable settings may create large developments those of big ones cannot even lay a hand on ~~that~~. Online taxi in numerous countries, for instance, is a great innovation introduced by a small company, called Carpino.

To put in a nutshell, not only ~~do~~ the governments but also talented individuals can begin huge movements in every spot on the earth as ~~the~~ wealth is not always beneficial to attract people.