

“Due to the development and rapid expansion of supermarkets in some countries, many small local business are unable to compete. Some people think that closure of local business will bring about the death of local communities. To what extent do you agree or disagree?”

Today compared with the past, the growth rate of establishing the hyper markets in the cities has escalated dramatically around the world. It is inevitable that the local businesses could not compete with their giant rivals. As a result, most of them gradually will have to shut down. Some people believe, that this event will end ~~to~~in the destruction~~ing~~ of local communities. I should say, somehow agree but not completely.

It is undeniable that thanks to the development of supermarkets ~~which~~ most of ~~which them~~ are ~~in the~~ outside of the city skirts, a ~~great deal~~large proportion of ~~the~~ population prefer to provide their required commodities by such stores in a convenient place with a variety of goods and enough spaces for car park. Therefore, e, demands for making the needs by local markets will decline. It means the more supermarkets develop the less local businesses will resist.

The closure of the local markets has the most impact on the lower class of society who used to work ~~on~~ in those places and now because of their age or lack of enough literacy not only can ~~not~~ they not work in hypermarkets but also could not afford to establish their business ~~to~~either.

All of the problems ~~which~~ mentioned above are true, but they could not ruin the local communities. In other words, because still there are lots of places that ~~daily~~ people recourse to them daily such as, clubs, cultural places, sport complexes, as well as high-end shops that the expansion of the hypermarkets do not have any effect on them. So individuals could come ~~in to~~into the city center and communicate with each others and prevent the death of local communities.

In conclusion , despite the fact that development of supermarkets has brought ~~about out~~ the closure of local businesses, it has its own benefits too and also local communities could be continued by other alternatives.
