

Nowadays families move to different countries for work. Some people think it has a negative effect on children, while others disagree. Discuss both views and give your own opinion.

Working abroad is not so uncommon in this day and age as it was decades ago. Many people cross the borders to find better opportunities from both financial and experience points of view. While there are certainly valid arguments to the contrary, many people argue that the benefits of such a change can benefit children in many ways. This essay will elaborate the merits and drawbacks of this controversial topic along with my own idea in this regard.

Those who are against moving to another country for work, believe that children can be deeply impacted because of cultural differences they face in their new place. That children are so-extremely sensitive to change of the environment they live in is an indisputable fact. Not only do children have to know the language of the destination country, but they also ought to be familiar with the culture. Neither financial benefits nor attractions of the new place can prevent children from the threats of different types of possiblely mental disorders.

On the contrary, individuals who are in favor of global moves for work reason that children who are fully supported by their parents, and are connected to their friends in their motherland can develop some skills that are professionally are-practiceds in the destinations. Playing the Spanish guitar in Spain, wrestling in Iran, spirituality and religious practices in India and martial arts in China are obvious examples. Gaining High skills of communications with people with different cultures is than their family- is another advantage obtained by these children.

By way of conclusion, I hold the idea that travelling in general can broaden a human's mind. Admittedly, working in a country will add so many experiences to children as well as parents. Culture in my view is not a matter that people can learn at schoolss. We have to live among people to feel and learn from different cultures.