

Some people claim that not enough of the waste from homes is recycled. They say that the only way to increase recycling is for governments to make it a legal requirement. □

To what extent do you think laws are needed to make people recycle more of their waste?

Recycling ~~becomes~~ has become a controversial topic these days and it is absolutely ~~it is~~ an important step in preserving our environment. Some argue ~~believe~~ that ~~is~~ recycling per se is not enough ~~of the trash~~ from our homes and that the best method for encouraging more recycling is to make it a legal obligation. From my ~~prospective~~ perspective, the first step should be educating the public about the importance of recycling and then the legal steps should be taken to implement as a new law.

Education is an important component of the recycling program, and it can lead many to choose to recycle without the need to make new recycling laws. Many people carelessly throw out paper and plastic products into trash buckets because they do not know the damage caused by this waste and about the technology which exists to make it reusable. When a person is cognizant ~~of about~~ the benefits of recycling on the planet and future, they ~~start~~ start to change their ways that used to be. Such individuals will become examples for their friends and neighbors, and little by little, this can lead to creating a culture between them.

Once people know why recycling is essential, a government can create laws that reward those who recycle. If individuals who recycle will be rewarded with lower taxes, it will reinforce the positive behavior, and they will encourage maintaining an environmentally friendly home, while ~~Whilst~~, those who keep throwing their garbage without an attempt to recycle should be fined a reasonable charge. As an example, the Austrian government successfully used a recycling system with the highest rate compared to ~~out of~~ any other country in the world that is estimated around 63 percent of all waste is diverted from landfills.

In conclusion, although I believe that laws are necessary to make more people recycle their household waste, raising people's awareness of recycling is ~~also~~ also needed and can be more effective in some cases.
