Today, some people think that men exactly can be a parent like women. Many, however, argue that being a better parent is directly related to the gender and women are extremely successful in this matter. They believe that this superiority is the confluence of some natural abilities such as kindness, the highly emotional link, communication and easy learning parenting in childhood.

Girls were prepared to be a parent ~~-, Having~~ Learnt it in childhood when ~~they- played~~playing with their dolls, and after that when ~~they helped~~helping their parents to raise their younger siblings. Additionally, women adopt it from their mothers since they really want to be like their mothers in their childhood, whereas boys' idols are their fathers. They are keen on using tools and trying to fix whatever they can find in home in lieu of acquiring parenting skills.

Another factor that has been cited as the cause of what makes women superior parents is their deeply emotional link with their children and vice versa. They are kinder than men, so they can offer massive pleasant feelings to their children which exactly kids need. Therefore, not only do mothers provide them with a lot of attentions ~~s~~ which rarely can men do, but also they are less aggressive than their male counterparts.

~~Conducted~~ as shown by studies by survey, women are more powerful communicator than men, thereby allowing them to have heartfelt communication with their children. They are more likely to be able to establish an emotionally intense-close relationship with the children by virtue of this ability, whilst men, due to having less time to spend with them and being weaker in communication are not a seemingly better parent ~~rather-~~ than compared to their wives.

Consequently, although as little as 50 years ago, the gender role in growing-up raising children has become more equal owing to the rise of stay-at-home dads, women are considered preferable parents because of their natural abilities.
