

It is important for children to learn the differences between right and wrong at an early age. Punishment is necessary to help them learn this distinction. Agree or disagree?? What sort of punishment should be allowed to use?

Parents certainly are the best educators in their children's lives. They have used different ways to deter them from following the wrong ways at an early age. I personally believe that both parents and teachers should guide children throughout their childhood as they might unconsciously get into dangerous situations.

One point which I believe to be absolutely pivotal is the fact that parents as the first teachers are responsible for correcting and guiding their kids. Exposed to the critical circumstances, not only must they ~~preserve~~protect their children but also they should show them the right way. At the same time, in my belief, parents and teachers should not prohibit children from experiencing new things which would help them to become more creative and adventurer. The distinction between ~~preservation~~protection and limitation is hardly clear-cut, which means that Parents should give their children a rational upbringing rather than strict, hence a more prosperous and creative future generation.

There are various ways ~~how to~~ learn-teach children good behavior and prevent them from bad ones. Depending on circumstances, these ways could be different, ranging from education and ~~reminding~~warning to punishments either withdrawal of privileges or physical punishment. While corporal punishment is frowned upon by many these days, I am firmly convinced that physical forms of punishment are often the most effective way of behavior management. Alternatives to it would be preventing them from talking to their parents for a certain time or depriving them ~~from~~of their interesting entertainments. Because children break the law without either incentive or motive and also the environment of school and home may affect ~~on~~ their acts, these punishments should be imposed logically ~~predicating~~predicated on their ages.

In conclusion, I believe parents and teachers should train kids in different aspects of their lives and in this way some certain punishments would be entirely justified.
