

Today more and more tourists are visiting places where conditions are difficult, such as the Sahara desert or the Antarctica. What are the benefits and disadvantages for tourists who visit such places?

There is no doubt that these days those who visit tough and challenging places are increasing. They have their own reasons, for instance: extraordinary experience, taking photos from special events, excitement, etc.

On the other hand, they face some dangers in their trip such as unexpected events, death, hunger, thirst, getting lost, dangerous animals.

When I dream about bizarre and peculiar trips like the Sahara desert or the Antarctica, I overflow with excitement and eager, and imagine myself how do I feel or what can I see there. These trips help us face with outlandish occasion. Having experience of such an event creates sense of being special. Moreover people who love photography can find singular views, also scientists can investigate their Thesis that will aid to improve science in some cases.

Although visualizing these types of trips is very ~~excitement~~exciting and ~~pleasure~~pleasant, you have to ~~notice~~pay attention to their risks and perils too.

You may get lost if you don't have any routing tools such as GPS, in that case the consequences could be ~~loose~~losing the way and ~~ran~~running out of food and water, lack of energy and unfortunately fight against death.

In addition, you have to pay attention to weather conditions. Severe weather brings you close ~~you even~~ to death.

Be aware of dangerous animals on your travels too, you have to learn how to deal with it in cases.

In spite of dangers in rough journeys, they are worth ~~to experience~~experiencing. You can achieve particular ~~experiment~~experience and knowledge. If you like risk in your life, now go and try out one of these trips.

We should not use imperative in our essay

جملات امری بکار نرود