

Childcare training courses should be mandatory for all parents. Do you agree or disagree with this statement? Give your own opinion and include relevant examples.

In many parts of the world parent will attend special classes to learn some basics about taking care of their children. While there are valid arguments to the contrary, I personally, believe these types of trainings benefit both parents and children in a variety of aspects. This short essay elaborate on this important topic along with some examples from my experience.

In some countries specific classes are obligatory for parents to prepare them to host their new guest to the best of their ability. In such classes parents will learn as to how to be a better father or mother by improving their knowledge in related fields. These courses seems more essential to younger parents who do not have either previous experience or theoretical knowledge in the area of parenting. Not only do the attendees enhance their child-medical knowledge, but they also improve their practical experience.

These classes are also beneficial for those who have already raised a child. Only after they attend these preparation classes, do they realize what issues they did not care before. Not feeding children by spoon or let children sleep as long as they want are bold subjects I leant in one of those classes. Furthermore, holding these classes can help further research and more development in the area of childcare. Spending a lot of time in well-known universities, researchers are trying to find the answer of the unknowns in children' world.

By way of conclusion, although many a parent believes childcare classes are time consuming, I maintain that these classes are arguably essential for most parents. The only exceptional cases are the experts in this field who are completely involved in this area in their everyday life.
