

More developing countries are given aid from international organizations to help them in their development plans. Some people argue that financial aid is important but others suggest that practical aid and advice are more important?

Discuss both views and give your opinion.

Development is a common topic which many are concerned about in developing countries. The public, the politicians and the educated people in these countries are always looking for the ways to improve their welfare. It seems that two main beneficial methods in fulfilling this goal are International financial supports and international consultancies. There are many hot debates about how to opt one of these strategies. This essay is going to discuss the issue in more detail.

Financial support may be the very first solution against poverty or lack of financial resources. But it has some drawbacks too. As these loans should be paid back in international currencies like Dollar or Euro, and as these countries may produce products for export and consequently generate incomes in these currencies, they may not be able to free themselves from these loans. Indeed, these loans put these countries in the danger of dependency on other countries. This dependency may be both in political and economic aspects. Consequently, not only could not these monetary provisions solve the predicaments, but it also could worsen the overall situation of the host country.

On the other hand, international consultant corporations stands outside the developing countries. Although they have many top-level managers from the countries subjected to development, they cannot prescribe better than those born and grown inside the country. If outsourcing strategies were the right solution, all other countries would adopt it and flourish. It has been said that, if an egg hatches from inside, life will start, but if it hatches because of an external impact, death is inevitably the only result. So it is highly recommended to societies to overlook international organizations advices and try themselves hard enough to tactfully build their dream country.

Over all, it should be emphasized that the way of development passes thorough not the external but the internal resources. It is highly suggested that instead of getting bewildered among tactful but superficial foreign solutions, countries heed more toward their human capitals and enjoy more their advices to find themselves in the desired situation.