Many museums charge for admission while others are free. Do you think the advantages of charging people for admission to museums outweigh the disadvantages?

Museums are the most historical and traditional part of cities which present local cultures of cities to indigenous people and other people around the world. People often make an excursion to the countryside and recreational parts of the cities. Museums embrace noteworthy part of the city. People mostly prefer to choose an economical one, but in my opinion, they should have been informed that the importance of the museums fee is absolutely efficient for countries growth.

Some people argue that government should not oblige residents of cities and especially tourists to pay charge for entrance to the museums because they believe that developing their cultures is more important than obtaining a few fees for maintenance and preserve the museums. However, among them, there are still some people think that tourists are exception not to pay. This should not forget tourist industry is an enormous source of income for the countries. All of the museums with different aspects of exhibition have a huge effect on acquaintance of the culture of destination countries.

On the other hand, some oppose to visit Museums without paying any payment. They claim that, not only should this charging append on maintaining and repairing the museums but also this money has benefit to the infrastructures of countries and tourist industry. From the point of psychological view, when we have to pay some price for something, we will appreciate this more than something for free. Apart from these issues, it is important to make entrance for free for students because visiting the museums has educational aspects for them.

To conclude all the statement above, although free entrance to museums lead to the excessive count of visitors, there are many countless benefits to obtain even a less fee for entry to the museums for all of the countries around the world.
